Mrs. Al Osborn Dies

Mrs. Al Osborn died at Vixen Inlet Monday morning. The remains were brought to Wrangell Tuesday and interred in the Redmen's cemetery Wednesday morning, Rev. H. P. Corser conducting the funeral service.

Mrs. Osborn is survived by a husband and four children: John, aged 12; Gertrude, 9; Albert 6; Anne, 4.

Mrs. Osborn was born in Wrangell 31 years ago. Before her marriage she was Miss Lucy Kluitz. Her death is attributed to heart disease, although it was generally supposed that she had consumption.

In July of last year Mr. and Mrs. Osborn lost their son, Leander, aged 10. Up to that time she had always been in vigorous health. Her health began to fail immediately after the death of her child, and she was never well again.

For more than a year Mr. Osborn's chief concern has been his wife's health. He has had her in the hospital at Juneau twice. This summer he sent her to Telegraph Creek for three months. Three weeks ago she joined her husband at Vixen Inlet. Mr. Osborn had planned to send her to Long Beach, Cal., in about three weeks.

In conversation with the Sentinel reporter Mr. Osborn said that he has no definite plans for the future. He said that his children are all that he has to live for, and that he is anxious to get in touch with some good educational institution that would take all of his children, as he does not want them separated. He is very anxious that his children grow up together, and instead of growing apart, become nearer and dearer to each other as they grow older.

Reception For Teachers

The Civic Improvement Club gave a reception at the gymnasium Friday evening in honor of the members of the faculty of the Wrangell Public Schools.

Seattle, Sept. 12.—Testifying before the House committee on Fisheries and Merchant Marine Stevens of the Shipping board said it was the intention of the board to commandeer such American ships in the Pacific coast and Alaska trade as may be useful for transports. He favored permitting Canadian ships to operate Alaska coastwise trade.

Washington, Sept. 12.—Sweden has admitted that her diplomatic service acted as a channel of communication between Count Luxburg and Berlin but that Swedish Minister Lowen having had no part in the affair would not be recalled from Argentina.

Mrs. Clark was undecided at the time of leaving whether she should remain with her daughter through the entire term. The school at Afognak of which Miss Clark will be the principal, has three teachers. The pupils will be mostly Russians and Indians. It is classified as a white school.

OUR TRIP UP THE STIKINE

Hazel B III Makes Voyage From Wrangell to Telegraph Creek in 24 Hours and 56 Minutes Running Time

The publisher of the Sentinel returned on the Hazel B III Saturday afternoon from the most scenic trip he had ever taken in his life. It is needless to say that he had been to Telegraph Creek.

Ever since coming to Alaska we have heard of the wonderful scenery along the Stikine. We have never doubted that it was a wonderful trip well worth taking, but had no idea that the whole length of the stream was one continuous panorama of scenic grandeur. It seems incredible that the outside world should know so little of a stream that will become famous as soon as its wonders become more generally known.

The steamship folders tell of the wonderful mountain scenery along the Inside Passage from Seattle to Skagway. But the Inside passage has one disadvantage—the mountains are too far away to be seen to the best advantage from the deck of an ocean going vessel. But when one is skimming along the Stikine on the scientifically constructed river boat, Hazel B III, he is on speaking terms with mountains and glaciers. None of the detail is lost through the haze of distance. The river itself winds like a mountain trail through narrow gorges and around the bases of peaks whose summits are clad in snows eternal. The various peaks become familiar in their general appearance, but are never seen just the same twice, and are always pleasing to the eye. In the morning they are kissed by the first beams of the rising sun, and the beholder is charmed at the wonderful dissolving views, as the early rays play about their summits. At another time they stand out in beautiful outlines against the deep blue sky forming an ensemble of transcendent beauty. An hour later the outlines may be lost by a considerable portion of the peaks becoming enthroned in clouds.

Another interesting feature of the trip up the Stikine is the fact that the region along the river is the habitat of animal species that millions of people have never seen outside of a menagerie. A moose swimming the stream in front of a boat is not an uncommon sight. Wild sheep and goats within easy shooting distance are to be seen from the cliffs on every trip. Bear are also much in evidence. We saw three bear within a short distance which were strolling about unmindful of the passing boat. One of the passengers, upon observing a bear almost as big as a cow near the shore said that the Hazel B III ought to have a machine gun mounted on the bow to protect itself in case of an attack.

Arriving at Telegraph Creek one finds a well kept town without one single house that shows the least sign of dilapidation. The people are all hospitality, so much so that the visitor does not think of himself as being among strangers.

Telegraph Creek is headquarters for a chain of Indian trading posts. Many thousands of dollars' worth of furs are shipped from this point annually. Ranching is also being carried on with marked success. Fox farming is another industry that is proving a success in this locality. In addition to its industries Telegraph Creek is also an outfitting point for big game hunters. At the present time there are several parties of prominent people hunting big game in the region of Dease lake who outfitted at Telegraph Creek. Last fall the Sentinel reporter talked with hunters who were returning from a hunt in the Telegraph Creek region. One gentleman who was a veteran big game hunter stated that the country east of Telegraph Creek is the greatest big game region on the North American continent. That this is beginning to be realized is shown by the fact that eleven big game hunters are already booked for next season with Mrs. Hyland who supplies horses, guides, etc., necessary for the hunt. Mr. J. Frank Calbreath who also outfits game hunters, and is well known to sportsmen, told us that he has also had a number of communications from hunters who will come next year.

More than 100 horses are owned by Telegraph Creek parties. One would naturally think that wintering horses would be a considerable expense in a region where hay is sold at $70 a ton. To our surprise we were told that horses may be left on the range all the winter and be in prime condition in spring.

Our trip also included a visit to the Indian village of Tahltan and the lava beds 15 miles above Telegraph Creek. In the party making the trip were Capt. Chas. E. Binkley of the Hazel B III, Mrs. Parsons of Berkely, Miss Hyland, Rev. H. P. Corser, and the Sentinel man.

The village of Tahltan is surprisingly clean and well kept. Near Tahltan is a bluff from which one may get a tremendous sweep of vision as he looks down into the great amphitheatre of nature. If one looks below there is a carpet of green and other colors representing the various phases of vegetation; if one looks upward he beholds a labyrinth of peaks. From this attractive point we journeyed down the valley to the lava beds, where we found great piles of cinders, some of them coal black, while others were of a reddish color. There is evidence of several successive periods of activity between, sufficiently long for soil to form and vegetation to flourish. In the region of Tahltan the banks of the Stikine on both sides are covered with cinders or lava and many interesting formations are found. The volcanic activities in this region are said to be recent. However, it is practically certain that all disturbances had ceased long before Columbus discovered America.

One of the priceless possessions of the upper Stikine is its forests. It will be generations before this region will face a timber problem. Besides, the forest has more than a material value to human life. Its beauty and strength are a part of a larger heritage. It is the last frontier where the spirit of the wild has eternal refuge. Everywhere we went we found an undergrowth of wild roses, wild currants, wild raspberries, saskatoon berries, etc. The rose bushes, however, were always in evidence. In June and July the whole Stikine valley must be like a flower garden.

It was our privilege to visit the ranch of J. Frank Calbreath several miles this side of Telegraph Creek. The approach to the ranch is by wagon road leading up from the river through a dense forest. A sudden turn in the road brought us in full view of the ranch from the lower side. The green fields of oats with the mowing machines in operation, and the farm house on the farther side, all looked like a beautiful painting with the rugged walls of mountains on both sides as an appropriate framing. Upon our arrival at the ranch we were greeted by Mr. McDonald, the foreman in charge, who extended us a welcome. This farm house in the far north is not unlike those of our Southern states. There are barns, haystacks, horses, cows, hogs, geese, ducks, chickens, cats, dogs, wash tubs, and clothes lines. A more ideal ranch one could not wish to see. Much of the produce from this ranch is marketed at Telegraph Creek.

We also visited the ranch of Frank Jackson, near the river, forty miles this side of Telegraph Creek. The ranch house is located in one of the prettiest spots in the valley, and is almost hidden in the foliage of the large trees by which it is surrounded. It is built of logs and its architecture is such that it looks more like a part of the surrounding scenery than an encroachment upon nature. Mr. and Mrs. Jackson invited us to dinner. And such a dinner! Wild goat, the choicest meat the north affords, was the basis of the meal, but there were plenty of trimmings such as freshly picked wild raspberries with cream. Truly it may be said that the ranchers of the Stikine have constantly on their menu, dishes that would be considered the rarest luxury anywhere in the States.

Within hailing distance of the Jackson ranch house was a tent where Mrs. Parsons, Miss Hyland and Miss Hankin were spending the week camping. In the forests of the Stikine valley the harmony of foliage and rocks and natural magnificence is so conducive to eternal quietude that it lures one to camp life, and there are so many mountain springs that almost any place is ideal for camping.

The people of Telegraph Creek may not all agree on questions of politics or religion, but there is one thing on which they stand as a unit. They all swear by the Hazel B III. They look upon Captain Sid Barrington as a public benefactor. One business man said to us, "You cannot know how much it means to us to have a reliable boat service between Wrangell and Telegraph Creek with a schedule that is maintained perfectly and may be absolutely depended upon." When the Hazel B III is in port at Telegraph Creek nothing is too good for its officers and crew.

The weather was ideal every day that we were away, and we did not encounter a gnat or a mosquito on the whole trip.

The running time from Wrangell to Telegraph Creek was 24 hours and 56 minutes. The river was very low and no special effort was made to hurry the boat along. With more water in the river the trip could easily be made in less than 24 hours running time. The return voyage requires less than half the time of the trip going.

We acknowledge special courtesies extended by the following persons: Hon. H. W. Dodd, Mrs. Winifred Hyland, Mr. J. Frank Calbreath, Mr. McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Jackson.

To recapitulate: The trip was a great one, the little boat a wonder, the skipper a prince, the chief engineer a joy, the purser very obliging, the steward all attention, the porter on the job all the time, the chef o' cooking all that could be desired, and the waiter as smooth as they make them.

THE RED CROSS SPIRIT SPEAKS by JOHN FINLEY

WHEREVER war, with its red woes
Or flood or fire or famine, goes,
There, too, go I;
If earth in any quarter quakes
Or pestilence its ravage makes,
Thither I fly.

I KNEEL behind the soldier's trench,
I walk mid shambles' smear and stench,
The dead I mourn;
I bear the stretcher and I bend
O'er Fritz and Pierre and Jack to mend
What shells have torn.

I GO wherever men may dare,
I go wherever women's care
And love can live,
Wherever strength and skill can bring
Surcease to human suffering
Or solace give.

I HELPED upon Haldora's shore;
With Hospitalier Knights I bore
The first red cross;
I was the Lady of the Lamp;
I saw in Solferino's camp
The crimson loss.

I AM your pennies and your pounds;
I am your bodies on their rounds
Of pain afar;
I am you, doing what you would
If you were only where you could—
Your avatar.

THE Cross which on my arm I wear,
The flag which o'er my breast I bear,
Is but the sign
Of what you'd sacrifice for him
Who suffers on the hellish rim
Of war's red line.

DR. CORSER IS OFF FOR FRONT

Brother of Wrangell Churchman Leaves for France—
Ranks As Captain.

A copy of the Scranton (Pa.) Tribune just received contains an account of the departure from Scranton of Dr. J. B. Corser, who is leaving for France to do his "bit."

Dr. Corser is a brother of Rev. H. P. Corser, rector of St. Philip's Church, Wrangell. The latter had hoped to make a trip east in time to say good-bye to his brother before his departure for France, but it is too late now. The article referred to is in part as follows:

"Dr. J. B. Corser, one of Scranton's most prominent physicians, leaves Scranton today for New York, and within a few days will be on his way across the ocean together with seventeen nurses and nine other physicians, their destination a base hospital in France."

"Dr. Corser is to join Dr. Crile, of Cleveland, known the country over as being one of the most famed surgeons the country has ever known. Dr. Crile left here with one of the first medical units to cross the ocean and has since been in charge of a base hospital near the battlefield in France. He has a corps of workers and has sent word for additional help."

"Dr. Corser for the past several weeks has been undergoing training at Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., and returned to this city last week. He spent most of the time at his farm at Dalton before leaving for the front."

"Dr. Corser has been commissioned a captain in the medical corps and will be in charge of nine other doctors. He said when and wherefrom he would sail he did not know. All that he knows was that he was to report to New York and that he was to sail for France."

"In speaking of the life at the Georgia fort, Dr. Corser said that it was great and that while the work was somewhat hard all the physicians liked the life very well. Since the war broke out he has always wanted to do his "bit" in the great conflict and was one of the first physicians in Lackawanna county to volunteer his services for the wounded at the front."

For Sale—My drayage business, including barn and feed on hand.—Oscar Carlson.

THE CHURCH AND EDUCATION

St. Philip's Church
What is the matter with modern education? Is anything the matter? Why do so many young people leave school before they are prepared for life? Why do the graduates of the little red school house on the hill so frequently go ahead of our town and city schools? What is the church's place in education? Can society afford to allow the church's place in education to fall into innocuous desuetude? These and many other questions will be considered at the lecture Sunday evening, September 16 at 7:30.

The Wrangell Sentinel would like to know the whereabouts of the relatives of Charles Stagger, the diver who was drowned between here and Juneau some time ago. It will be to their interest to communicate with the Sentinel.

Steamer Cassiar Leaves Juneau
for a Trip Up the Taku River.

(Juneau Empire)
Leaving Wednesday of this week there will be attempted the first steamer trip ever made to the headwaters of the Taku river, by Captain William Strong of the riverboat Cassiar, with Juneau business men under the direction of E. P. Pond.

The Cassiar is now at the Worthen dock. She is 65 feet long, 18 foot beam, draws one foot of water and has a tunnel propeller.

The purpose of the trip is to investigate the conditions with a view to securing the Atlin trade to come via Juneau and to get into closer touch with the industrial, mineral and agricultural possibilities of the Territory drained by the Taku system and the inland districts beyond.

Three years ago Mr. Pond and Mr. Strong, realizing the possibilities of trade up the Taku and especially with the Atlin district, made a trip up the river, but the boat they then used drew too much water. They kept in mind the matter until the Cassiar was built.

Aside from the industrial possibilities of the trip, the journey up the river presents to view the most wonderful scenery in Alaska.

There are ample accommodations aboard the steamer for a number of persons. Messrs. Pond and Strong will call on the business men tomorrow to see how many can get away to make the first trip to the headwaters of the Taku. A battery of cameras will be taken along and it will become a historic trip, when trade in that direction has been fully developed.

Although an integral part of the one system, each branch has been assigned to it the full amount of Capital required by the Territorial Banking Board for the establishment of a Bank in such a location. Each branch is therefore equipped to serve its customers as fully as any independent bank, but with the added strength and resources of the entire institution to draw upon. Furthermore each is responsible to the Territorial Banking Board, is examined and supervised independently and renders its statements direct to the Board. The Bank of Alaska is therefore, because of its double supervision and safeguards, peculiarly "An Institution of Strength and Character."
